

BRISTOL HIGH WINS LOWER BUCKS CROWN IN TILT PLAYED HERE

Noses Out Buckingham In The Second Game of Series By One Run

FINAL SCORE IS 11 TO 10

Visitors Had Game in The Bag Until Bristol Broke Loose In the Sixth Inning

A line single to right field by Wilbur Van Lenten drove in the tying runs and he himself crossed the plate a moment later with the winning run to give Bristol High its second consecutive Lower Bucks County baseball championship as a result of their sensational upthrift game that enabled them to nose out the Buckingham Buccaneers, 11-10, on Landreth's Field here yesterday afternoon.

The Bucks, however, had the game literally "in the bag" up until Bristol broke out unexpectedly with a big five-run flare-up in the sixth inning to turn a 10-6 deficit into a 11-10 lead that held through the seventh inning and thus a rout was turned into a victory when Bristol pulled a rescue act to snatch the game from the fire.

That rally went like this: With one out, Pete DeLuca struck at a wild pitch and of course missed. But the pitch was the third strike and so he easily reached first safely. He immediately proceeded to pilfer the key-stone sack then rode home on Jack Spencer's clean hit to right. After Spencer also stole second, both Hardy Johnson and Bill Gallagher waited round for free tickets to first which loaded the sacks. Then Stanley Dick tapped to Bill Erwin, who after momentarily fumbling the apple, picked it up and touched third to force Johnson at the hot corner, but in the meantime Spencer had scored the second run.

Although Horton seemed to have pulled himself out of the hole which he got himself into, the worst was still to come. With two strikes on him, Wilbur Van Lenten immediately became the hero of the game when he laced a clean line single into right field that counted both Gallagher and Dick after the latter two moved up on a double steal. Van Lenten went into second on the throw-in and continued to third when Horton, who cut off the throw, threw wild to second trying to nip "Wil." He scored a moment later when Pat Van Pelt threw wild at the plate after missing a Horton pitch.

Percy G. Ford, whose business address is 1776 Farragut avenue and who daily displays the American flag in front of his office, sticks his chest out even further than ever now that the name of Farragut avenue is to be changed to Constitution Boulevard.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Tax Collector Neal Nolan of Morrisville will make a drive on collecting the delinquent 1937 school, borough and county personal taxes. Those who have not paid will be faced with paying additional costs. The unpaid bills will be placed in the hands of a deputy collector who will proceed to levy and sell personal property if the tax is not paid. The cost of this procedure and the officer's costs will be added to the bill.

Unusually good prices were received for a number of household articles belonging to the estate of Louisa V. Foulke at the sale held at her late home at New Hope.

Auctioneer Brown found very little difficulty in disposing of a medicine cabinet. Bidding started at a comparatively low figure, but in a short time it was bid to $56, the price for which it was sold. Old andirons sold very readily for $22.50 and fireplace fixtures brought $12.50. Interest also centered around the disposal of several mirrors which sold from $10 to $20. Five rush bottom chairs were sold in short order for $8 each and a high-boy brought approximately $50.

Prices received for other articles were as follows: Six blanket chests, $5 to $15; coal stove, $5; kitchen range, $5; electric refrigerator, $38.50; set of dishes, $12; piano, $8; living room suite, $28; table, $13.50; desks, $5; sofa, $1; chest of drawers, $50 and four poster bed, $8.

Dishes, some of which were very old, brought from $1 to $4 each.

Proceeds of the sale amounted to about twice as much as had been expected.

Estimates have been received for Doylestown's new motion picture playhouse to be known as the "County Theatre" which will be built on the same site as the present Strand Theatre, the community's only picture house.

The present Strand will close on Saturday night, June 25 and will be razed starting the following Monday. The new theatre, modern in every design will be completed and opened by Saturday, September 3. The new show house will have more than 700 seating capacity. Stores in front of the present Strand Theatre will be removed and a new front built of marble, stainless steel, porcelain enameled iron and white stucco erected in its place.

A feature of the new building will be a lounge on the second floor. One of the walls of the lounge will be photographic murals of historic landmarks of the county seat. Both summer and winter air-conditioning will be installed.

The new theatre will be built by the owner, Charles Kahn, of Philadelphia, and will be managed by Joseph A. Wodeck, who has managed the Strand for a number of years.

William Wilhelm, engineer in charge of the WPA projects in Bucks county; C. Joel Young, district fish warden; Dr. John J. Bridgeman, representing the Kiwanis Club of Doylestown; George S. Hotchkiss, representing the Rotary Club of Doylestown; and members of Chalfont Council attended the meeting sponsored by the Lions Club of Chalfont.

Engineer Wilhelm stated that in order to get WPA aid on the project it would be necessary to dredge the creek to a greater depth so that there would be a better flow and to remove the silt and possibly uncover new water supplies. His estimate was that it would cost about $25,000 to complete the job properly. Twenty per cent of the cost would have to be paid by borough and township involved.

Fish Warden Young emphasized the improvement would appeal to fishermen and what would be accomplished in the way of preventing dangerous erosion which is costing the farmers a tremendous sum annually.

Mr. Hotchkiss suggested that the first step to be taken seemed to be to exert influence to end the pollution of the stream by nearby Lansdale Borough if the stream is to be of any value to fishermen or to persons using it for recreational purposes.

The potted lemon tree has been growing on Mr. Nace's farm for 65 years.

The tree grew from an ordinary lemon seed planted by Mr. Nace's mother. Mr. Nace started caring for it.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

The Record

Washington, June 15.
IN SOME respects the record of the Seventy-Fifth Congress, now fully written, stands out as unique in American history. Sitting almost continuously since January, 1937, with two regular sessions and one special session, its results were completely unforeseen and against every reasonable expectation.

IT spent more money, indulged in more talk and passed fewer laws than any session in recent years. The total appropriations exceeded twenty billions, twelve of which were authorized in the last three months. Except for one World War year, there has been nothing approximately as great. A special appropriation of $400,000 was necessary to print the 10,000 additional pages of the Congressional Record forced by the various filibusters. Though it began in a strong economy atmosphere, with the President insisting upon a balanced budget and urging rigid retrenchment, it ends in an unmatched and lavish outburst of spending.

THE RESTLESS AGE

There comes a time in the life of most boys and girls, when that youngster becomes restless and dissatisfied with home life. The time has passed, if it ever existed, when the young person had full confidence in the judgment of parents. The feeling has grown up that youth knows better than age what it needs, and youth is disposed to put up a fight to have its own way.

In families having some money, the answer to that situation is frequently to send the boy or girl away to a school. It is felt that such young people have gone beyond the point where the home can control them, and that it is better to put them out into independent hands, which have made a science of governing young people. Also that in a school they have so many pleasant times, and are so subject to the disciplined opinion of the school, that the restless spirit is overcome and the young persons settle down to regular study and work.

That may be a very fine solution, if the family can afford it. But how about the millions of families that have no money for such purposes? Must the effort to control such young people be given up, and must they be allowed to drift with the bunch on the street?

What those youngsters need is some form of activity that will interest them. If something can be found that will make up their minds, it will cure their restlessness.

The chance to earn money is one thing that has saved many of these youngsters. Some part time job not interfering with their school work has proved the salvation of many of them. The chance to play some athletic game has carried many a boy over that rough period. Just find something to fill those growing minds, and the devil won't get in there.

ANOTHER MELTING POT

The Melting Pot of the Nation is another name for the United States. One thinks of no other country as having this distinction, but such a claim is made for Canada by Dr. Sherwood Fox, president of the University of Western Ontario, who protests that it is too commonly taken for granted that Canada is too young a country to be regarded as a fusion of stocks and races. Dr. Fox told the Royal Society of Canada at Ottawa that the Dominion long since earned that designation. May it not be, he asks, that a national melting pot involves not merely the extensive intermarriage of people of various ethnic origin but also the inter-marriage of different racial ideas, customs and opinions, the crossing of countless personal and regional influences, the unremitting amalgamation of social experiences of all kinds by the ceaseless ebb and flow of the population within a country's confines?

In Canada, the process has been an inconspicuous one, just becoming visible. The ordinary observer, conscious of the separateness of certain population ingredients, does not realize the racial and social fusion, which for many years has made of our neighbor to the north another melting pot, not so big nor so tumultuous a crucible as the United States, perhaps, but a melting pot nevertheless.

Nations could develop new resources with the money now spent for armament, but you can't wear a Sam Browne belt while draining swamps.

Caring for Lemon Tree Too Much for Man at 87

t when he moved into his parents' home half a century ago.
Mr. Nace and his wife live alone in the small brick farm house. They spend most of their time in the kitchen. It has been years, apparently, since the big front door has been opened or since the stairs, carpeted with newspaper, have been used.

Mrs. Nace never leaves the house, according to her husband. Mr. Nace, however, goes out daily to care for his tree and for his 30-odd hives of bees.

He smiled as he said: "I'm strong pretty near every day. Bees sure are queer creatures."

He is a proof of the theory that rheumatism is prevented by bees stings. For all his 87 years, he has never been rheumatic.

Explaining the intricacies of caring for a lemon tree in the chilly climate of Pennsylvania, Mr. Nace said that the tree must be moved inside before the first frost. Once inside, if it is to bear fruit, it must not be kept too warm or too moist.

"When we first had it we watered it and kept it near the fire. We didn't know any better. So it started blossoming in the middle of January."

It takes two years for his lemons to become ripe, Mr. Nace said. The tree usually bears about 50 lemons a year.

The Great Game of Politics

gress on legislative and political matters and its attitude toward the Executive is just as remarkable. It started off looking for guidance to an immensely popular President, fresh from his great 1936 victory, at the top of his prestige and with a larger party majority in Congress than any President in a hundred years. The notion that it would revolt against Mr. Roosevelt was regarded as ridiculous. Yet revolt it did in an astonishing and significant way. It mortifyingly beat his most cherished plan to seize control of the Supreme Court, resisting extraordinary White House pressure and personal Presidential appeals. When it came back in the special session of last November it rejected the wage-and-hour bill, and, in the regular session this year, despite every Administration effort, refused passage to the anti-lynching and the departmental reorganization bills, both deeply desired by the White House. And it passed a tax bill so disliked by Mr. Roosevelt that he let it become a law without his signature and denounced it to the country.

UNDER the circumstances, this was a really extraordinary exhibition of independence. However, it was certainly balanced by the almost complete subservience into which Congress lapsed in the last month of the session. It then passed the President's wage-and-hour bill, for which there is no real deal, and the theory as well as the details of which are open to question. It passed, too, his whole pump-prime program, in the soundness of which not more than a fifth of those who voted for it believe. It yielded to his demand that no strings be attached to the great sums given him. It gave way to him in the proposed anti-monopoly investigation. Most amazing of all, it voted down amendments to the spending-lending bill, which would have made it impossible for the Administration to use relief funds as a club with which to force members of Congress into line.

IN BRIEF, they refused to free themselves. While denouncing the mixture of politics with relief, they rejected three separate proposals to take politics out of relief, thus creating an honest election issue upon which the opposition will operate in this and the next campaign. There is not space here to discuss fully the causes of this Congressional transition first from subservience to independence and then from independence to an even greater subservience, except to say that chiefly it was due to the fact that this is an election year. The unfounded fright taken from the over-emphasized Florida primaries, the great temptation of the Federal funds, the anxiety to adjourn, reluctance to be put in a position of opposing a "recovery program" and incurring Administration hostility on the eve of a primary—all combined to sap the Congressional spirit and relegate reason to the rear.

APPRECIATION of these facts and a complete sense of futility sent Senator Glass home in disgust two weeks ago. The Congress dies in a murky political atmosphere, with the President preparing for a political tour across the country (finance, with public funds), while members of Congress rush home to patch up their political fences and face the voters. The whole mess winds up on a low moral plane, with a political circus under the guise of an anti-monopoly investigation about to be staged by the young White House radicals; with the unemployed at nearly the 1934 highwater mark; with business awfully sick; its recommendations rejected and its stimulation sought by a method which has already failed once. It is not what could be called a pretty picture nor a pleasing prospect, though it could be worse.

Mute evidences of such practice were not lacking on my 1,000 mile journey. Scores of mud and wood "Chinese houses" were flattened out as though a giant steam roller had passed that way. It was a depressing sight to see Chinese farmers working in fields surrounding the pile of rubbish that last summer was their ancestral abode.

Always nearby such a scene was a armed Japanese military truck or an overturned train which had brought down Japanese wrath on the villagers who, in all likelihood, had nothing to do with the raiding activities of the armed Chinese partisans.

The isolated Japanese garrisons in railway stations and towns, were always in a state of expected siege from the partisans, appear to get along with the local peasants. However, the soldiers with whom I spoke invariably expressed their nostalgia for Japan.

Many of them have spent six months and more in these remote stations with little to do but watch passing trains and stand by for expected night attacks. Above all, they seem to be homesick for the blossoms of their homeland. Everywhere I saw branches of flowering trees stuck in beer bottles in the encampments.

While it would be decidedly erroneous to charge these Japanese troops with lowered morale, it cannot be claimed that they are any too happy under conditions as exist in North China.

In the next article John Goette will deal with the relations between the Japanese army and the Chinese civilians in the occupied areas through which he traveled.

"Jap" Soldiers Trained To Die for Country

hard to make any report other than my own cryptic one.

"I hope, Captain, that it comes soon."

Whether the Japanese army is bringing peace or not is open to debate, but at least it is dying by the hundreds for the cause.

Colonel Shigetaka Obara, in conducting me, move by move, over the day's battle under the walls of Chingtingfu, told how 150 men of his battalion had been killed or wounded in a dawn to dusk battle.

The Colonel was present when Major General Hida demonstrated for me the different methods the Japanese army has for stepping up the fighting power of its soldiers. First he produced a six-inch metal bottle of oxygen into which fitted by means of a valve a twelve-inch rubber tube. Just before a hard battle, the General explained, each man is ordered to breathe a shot of oxygen which is supposed to send him at the foe.

Next I was given a bar of exceedingly palatable chocolate. Such bars were fed to the Japanese troops in face of a long pursuit in order to give them increased stamina. Lastly, there was a carton of sweet caramels. The troops eat these when energy is needed quickly for a hand-to-hand encounter with the enemy.

While taking this special care of its men, the Imperial Japanese army is harsh on those who fail to do and die after the pattern of the Samurai.

"No Japanese officer or soldier is expected to be taken a prisoner of war. He must kill the enemy or kill himself," declared Lieutenant General Kiyoshi Ktsuki in response to my question about Japanese prisoners taken by the Chinese army.

"If a Japanese soldier is badly wounded, say the loss of an arm or leg, and is captured, he will be tried by court martial when released. Although he may be freed of charges of cowardice, our code would prevent his returning to his native place. He would be an outcast," continued the General.

"And should an unwounded Japanese be returned from capture, the court martial could impose the death penalty upon him," said General Katsuki.

The same grim code is applied to Chinese civilians, according to General Katsuki, who frankly admitted that the Japanese were burning and razing whole villages in reprisal for attacks by Chinese partisan bands.

"This is in keeping with rules of international warfare," explained General Katsuki. "Sometimes Chinese villagers welcome our troops, giving them tea and finding them houses in which to live, only to bring them into ambush. In such cases we destroy the village."

Mute evidences of such practice were not lacking on my 1,000 mile journey. Scores of mud and wood "Chinese houses" were flattened out as though a giant steam roller had passed that way. It was a depressing sight to see Chinese farmers working in fields surrounding the pile of rubbish that last summer was their ancestral abode.

"The Stolen God" by EDISON MARSHALL

SYNOPSIS

When Ned Holden stepped from the train at Bangkok, Siam, he looked like an American tourist on his first trip to the Orient. Yet Holden, son of a devoted Yankee mother and a zealous American missionary, had been bred in Asia. Ned learned basic Indo-Chinese languages as a child. Now, a master of Oriental speech and customs, he stood at the top of his strange profession. Officially an ethnologist, his real job is to help maintain the white man's peace over a million square miles of savage country. Back from a dangerous search for an Annamite revolutionary, Holden now plans a three months' holiday among his own kind. He longs for the American club, the social amenities and—most of all—to meet an attractive American girl.

CHAPTER II

At five o'clock, he wandered over to the Grand Oriental Hotel to watch the tea dance. There he would get to look at the prettiest girls in the colony.

Yes, they were here in beives. White arms, glossy hair, dazzling eyes. But it hardly occurred to him to do more than look; the silence and loneliness of the jungle was on him still. So he took a seat near the dance floor, ordered beer, and was content to feast his gaze.

Presently his ears grew busy too. That was the trouble with trained ears like his—they would not lie down and rest. They were always alert for some little alien note in the chorus of the jungle, or a false accent in the jabberings of a tribe. Out of the mangle chatter at the tables, a single voice suddenly gripped his attention.

Although he could not see the speaker—she was behind his shoulder—he made a picture of her distinctly pleasing. Of course, she was an American girl from the Middle West, a newcomer, young, and privileged—she could tell that by her accents and tone when she ordered tea. He stole a quick glance. At once a warm wave very much like happiness swept over him and lighted his dark eyes.

To Ned, it was a strange and startling experience. He could hardly believe it, nor yet dismiss it as an absurd illusion. He had better stop and examine it, as he would examine a mysterious trail through the jungle.

At first he thought it might be just her beauty. She had more than her share—vivid blue eyes, lively features, full lips, amber-colored hair. But he had known beauty before—forest fairylands of waxen flowers and gay-hued birds—and today's happiness was new. The wild, wise tribesmen of his childhood would have had a reasonable explanation, close to the heart of life. They would say the new moon, the mating moon, had risen in his skies and was drawing the strong tides of his veins. Perhaps so—there was a subtle appeal to him in her slim youthful figure. But even this was not enough.

Suddenly he guessed the truth. It was a mysterious trail through the jungle, and that trail led home. By some queer twist of his mind that only a long-jawed psychologist could explain, this vivacious jolly-looking girl symbolized and personified the land of his father, his lost world.

Miss America! That overworked beauty-contest word suddenly took real meaning. He had seen enough exotic tropic women, women like flaming poinsettias, birds of paradise. Here was just the kind of girl he wanted to know—Western to the last hair of her head, wholesome and natural as a Kansas sun-flower.

Until this moment Ned Holden had been something of a fatalist. He had learned about Kismet on his usual knee. In some misty corner of his brain he could still accept what old Koh-Kee would have believed beyond shadow of doubt—that he and this girl had been fated to meet since the earth was hatched from the egg, and all that happened between them would be like a motion-picture reel run backward and thrown in shadow on the silver screen of time. But suddenly he put no confidence in these cosmic arrangements. If he were not to lose his new trail in a blind thicket, he had better turn it down at once.

First, he would ask her to dance. She might refuse, but not likely; sitting alone at a public dance made her fair game.

She heard him out, swept him with one keen look, and rose to her feet. The next moment she was in his arms.

To the other couples, it was just another dance. The orchestra hour or two to spare. I know Bangkok fairly well. It's my headquarters."

She glanced up into his face. "I think I'd enjoy that. What would you recommend we see first?"

"The greatest sight in Bangkok is the Emerald Buddha, but you ought to save it for the last. Probably you've seen it already."

"We went there this morning, but they were making some repairs in the inner temple and we couldn't get in. I must say I don't care much. I've seen enough Buddhas to last me a lifetime."

He stared at her wildly. Didn't she know what she was saying? But honked and tonked; chairs scraped, dishes rattled. Even to his partner, it might be no more than an incident of the afternoon. But to Ned it was drama of a deep, still kind. He had not mistaken this trail—there were familiar footprints in the damp grass and remembered shrines along the way. And at its end, if he could ever reach it, gleamed the friendly lights of home.

"Do you make a practice of asking girls you don't know to dance?"

She must have guessed something, for she gave him a quick, curious glance.

"Who are you?"

"My name is Ned Holden."

"Do you make a practice of asking girls you don't know to dance?"

"I don't make a practice of dancing at all. Perhaps you notice it."

"You've got a queer, slippy, slinky step I've never seen before, as though you were dancing up on a tiger. And you seem a little excited about something. I suppose I shouldn't be curious—about a complete stranger—"

"I'm excited about dancing with an American girl, after several weeks in the jungle."

"I didn't come here to dance," she said thoughtfully. "I'm just waiting for my friends. But when you asked me—and you looked at me so strangely, as though you'd seen me before—We haven't met, have we?"

"No. I don't even know your name."

She ignored this bait. "What have you been doing in the jungle? That sounds interesting."

after all, how could she know? To most Americans the Emerald Buddha was only a page in a guide book. Only a few white people in the world knew its vast artistic and political importance.

The music stopped; he guided her to her table. "That evidently jarred you—what I said about the Buddha," she went on. "Why don't you sit down and tell me about it? My friends may not be back for half an hour."

"I'd rather talk about America, but if you'd really like to know—"

He explained that the Emerald Buddha, in the royal pagoda in Bangkok, was probably the most interesting inanimate object in the world. It was impossible to think of it save as a living thing, so strange and exciting had been its

TIMELY RECIPES

You Will Want to Try!

Colorful vegetables carefully prepared bring a wealth of variety to your menus this time of year. With so many different kinds to choose you might try an all vegetable dinner or luncheon—but be sure to serve vegetables in lavish profusion for they minister to health as well as appetite. Here is a suggestion for a vegetarian dinner that is so satisfying that the meat course will never be missed.

Stuffed Green Peppers
Tomatoes on the Half Shell
Baked Potatoes
Head Lettuce with Russian Dressing
Potato Custard
Coffee

Stuffed Green Peppers
2 green peppers
2 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
1 cup of milk
1 cup boiled rice
1/3 cup cheese
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon paprika
1 tablespoon chopped onion.

Wash peppers, cut out and discard seeds and pulp. Rinse well in cold water. Melt butter and add flour. When blended, add milk and cook until very thick sauce forms. Stir constantly. Add rice, cheese and seasonings. Stuff peppers. Arrange in small pan. Add one-third inch water and bake 30 minutes in slow oven. Baste frequently. This recipe may be increased according to the number of people to be served.

Tomatoes On the Half Shell
Have large firm, meaty tomatoes, cut them crosswise without peeling, then brush the cut surface with melted butter, sprinkle with chopped green pepper and parsley and a little onion. Bake in a hot oven till tender and the tops nicely browned.

Potato Custard
Pare and grate four white potatoes into a quart of milk. Beat four eggs and add three-quarters of a cup of granulated sugar beating it all the while. Stir in half a teaspoon of salt, cinnamon and a quarter of a teaspoon of grated nutmeg and the grated rind of half a lemon. When well mixed turn into the milk, mix thoroughly, then pour into a buttered baking dish or custard cups set in a shallow pan partly filled with lukewarm water. Place in a moderate oven and bake till the custards are set and a knife inserted in the center comes out clean and dry. Cool and top with whipped cream just before serving.

New Vegetable Dishes
Here are some delicious new ways of serving familiar vegetables—try them out and increase your reputation as a cook.

Vegetable Salad
Cook separately and dice 2 beets, 2 carrots, 2 turnips. Mix lightly and add 1 cup cooked lima beans or peas. Toss in a dressing made of 2 tablespoons melted butter blended with 1 tablespoon lemon juice and 1 teaspoon chopped parsley and salt and pepper to taste. Line a salad bowl with lettuce and heap the salad mixture in a mound.

Cauliflower Souffle
To 1 cup of white sauce made with milk or cauliflower water add 4 egg yolks beaten until thick and 1 cup cooked cauliflower cut in tiny pieces. Cool and fold in 4 egg whites beaten stiff. Bake 20 minutes in a hot oven, serve at once.

Onions French Style
Use small white onions, cooking them whole or the large Spanish or Bermuda variety cut in rings. Cover with boiling water, let stand for half an hour, then drain, place in a double boiler and dot with butter. Cook gently till tender. Season and serve.

Southern Peas and Onions
Clean and cut the tops off a bunch of young onions. Split the onions lengthwise and add 1 slice of bacon and 1 cup fresh green peas. Add three-quarter cup boiling water and boil till the onions and peas are tender. Add more water if necessary. Remove the bacon, season to taste with salt and pepper. The liquid should be cooked almost away. A white sauce may be added to this recipe if you desire a creamed dish.

Delectable Dishes You Can Prepare In Advance

If you manage your household without help or with the assistance of one maid, you'll want to utilize dishes that can be made ahead of time—particularly when all outdoor convalesces to lure you away from household tasks. You'll be amazed at the added hours of leisure a little systematic planning can give. Perhaps you'd like to give a buffet supper one of these nights but shrink at the prospect of long hours spent in preparing a suitable menu. Here is one that can be ready long before the first guest rings your door bell—and it looks and tastes like something extremely "special."

Jellied Chicken Loaf
2 tablespoons granulated gelatin
8 tablespoons cold water
2 cups boiling chicken stock
1 cup diced cooked chicken
2 hard cooked eggs, diced
1 cup shredded celery
4 tablespoons chopped pimientos
4 tablespoons chopped green peppers
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon paprika.

Soak the gelatin in cold water 5 minutes. Add the chicken stock and stir until gelatin dissolves. Cool and allow to thicken a little. Add rest of ingredients and pour into a ring mold. Cool until stiff. Unmold on lettuce and place a dish of mayonnaise in the center of the ring.

Broiled Shrimps
You can prepare these in advance and pop them into the oven the last minute for broiling. Take a quantity of fresh or canned shrimps and roll each in bacon and fasten with a toothpick—just a few minutes before serving put them under the broiler until the bacon is crisp.

Tomatoes Stuffed with Caviar
Choose small ripe tomatoes and hollow out the centers. Mix caviar with chopped egg whites and fill centers. Serve on a platter garnished with water cross. With the above dishes serve potato chips, radishes, giant ripe olives and spring onions and small Parker House rolls. These can be heated at the last minute. The following delicious dessert is very attractive and decorative and also has the merit of being ready in advance.

Tipsy Trifle
Make a soft custard in a double boiler, using 1 pint milk, 3 eggs and one-half cup sugar. Beat eggs and sugar together, add to hot milk and stir till custard coats spoon. Cool and flavor with almond. Have ready a rather stale sponge cake. Slice it and line the bottom of a glass dish with the slices. Moisten well with sherry and cover with jam or jelly. Cover this with macaroons dipped in wine. Then another layer of cake and jam and so on till the dish is three-quarters full. Pour over this the chilled custard. Top with the stiffly beaten whites of 2 eggs, beaten with 4 tablespoons of sugar. Add to this 3 tablespoons of jelly and serve cold.

Molded Salads
For the ordinary "mine run" of meals there are many short cuts such as preparing a molded salad in advance. Here are some that are especially appropriate for this time of year.

Fruit Salad
Put 1 beaten egg in double boiler, add 2 tablespoons pure vinegar and 2 tablespoons sugar and stir constantly till thick and smooth. Cool and fold in one-half cup whipped

KNOW YOUR STATE

Expansion of Planning

By F. A. Perkins, Executive Director
Pennsylvania State Planning Board

The value of planning and zoning for cities, for boroughs and even for the first class townships, has long been recognized and State enabling legislation for such planning and zoning has been on the statute books for many years. This planning and zoning has had, in the past, for the most part, but one purpose; namely, the improvement of the municipality's physical structure. Better street plans, modern public buildings, efficient water and sewerage systems and the like are the aim of planning commissions in these urban areas; while the restricting of various types of development within and near the municipality's limits is the job of the local zoning commission.

It was not, however, until comparatively recently that far-sighted citizens and governmental authorities began to realize the value of planning for zoning as a ready and effective tool for not only improving the physical structure of American life, but also the economic and social structures as well.

Pennsylvania is a leader in this rapid expansion of public planning. We have our State Planning Board, created in 1934 by Governor's appointment and later (July 1936) made a statutory arm of the Commonwealth's government. We have several regional planning commissions, such as the Interstate Commission on the Delaware Basin, the Tri-State Planning Commission and the Ohio Valley Planning Commission. And now we also have the necessary enabling legislation for setting up both county planning and zoning commissions.

regional planning commissions comprising several counties, and for zoning commissions in townships of the second class. In fact, the expansion of eligibility to plan and to zone in Pennsylvania has reached the point at which every foot of our State is covered by enabling legislation.

Russell VanNest Black, National Resources Committee consultant to the Pennsylvania State Planning Board, in an article appearing in the May 1938 issue of "Pennsylvania Planning," says of this recent planning and zoning legislation:

"The extension of planning and zoning powers to these remaining political subdivisions of the State is timely, for much of present day development is taking place in county and township territory outside of incorporated cities and boroughs and therefore beyond the reach of controls previously established for the more intensively urbanized areas. With the extensive use of the automobile and widespread availability of electric service have come an extension of homes, business, and industries into the rural areas, especially along the more heavily traveled highways. Zoning is needed to bring order into the development of these 'road-towns,' to protect rural property values, to preserve the usefulness and attractiveness of highways built at large public expense, and to save Pennsylvania's unsurpassed countryside from depopulation by thoughtless, careless, and unscrupulous builders and land developers.

"More recently there has appeared a new need for rural zoning, especially on a county-wide or regional basis, as provided by the new legislation. Analyses of the increasing cost of government and of the plight of agriculture in certain states, including Pennsylvania, indicate that in the interests of public economy and in the long-time interests of agriculture, steps must be taken toward the gradual withdrawal of unsuitable lands from active farming use and toward the gradual depopulation of sparsely settled areas where struggling families are unable to produce enough from the land to pay for even a small part of minimum public services such as those of schools and roads. By zoning the least suitable lands against agricultural settlement and use, rural populations ultimately may be brought into closer concentration upon the better lands, or to locations more readily accessible to State services, with benefits to the people concerned and to the Commonwealth."

Often the discussion of problems of public planning keeps too closely to the higher and more abstract side of such problems. People who are neat and thrifty but who find themselves hard driven to meet the rent or the mortgage installments and to make the modest yet greatly needed repairs on their modest homes, have trouble in seeing what the "preservation of the American way of life" has to do with solving or easing these homely difficulties. If people toss peanut shells onto their neatly scrubbed front porches or litter their swept pavements with pop-corn sacks and chewing gum wrappers, they feel a just resentment. They know that here is something wrong, something unneighborly and unfair. If an inconsiderate neighbor burns garbage with a leaky chimney and their parlor or sitting room is fouled with the stench, they think the village burgess or the town cop should look into the matter of abating the nuisance.

If families of doubtful respectability and of visible indifference to cleanliness and domestic good order move into some of the fine old houses of better families that have died out, or are to be housed in "jerry-built" tenements virtually next door, they can clearly understand that an injury has been suffered and that something should be done to stop such things from happening.

Seeking some cool beauty spot along the country highway or repairing to the old familiar haunts by the mill stream they are rightly indignant at finding the eloquent proofs of urban extension in the form of a smelly litter left over from picnic festivities. As a recent article in the State Planning Board's monthly bulletin, "Pennsylvania Planning," puts it, "A little farther on, Dicky Roe, Jr., gathers a lovely and lavish armful of fragrant apple blossoms from the thrifty farmer's crack apple orchard while Ma Roe tidies up the wayside scenic spot with a generous sprinkling of sardine cans, improvised lunch boxes and the somewhat bedraggled remnants of the Sunday funnies. Little Willie Roe, not to be outdone in unrestrained individualism, asserts even at his tender age his democratic privilege by defacing with graven images or obscene verse the public comfort station and, if he thinks of the future at all, hopes half enviously he may grow up to the proprietorship of a fine string of hot-dog stands along this much traveled historic highway."

These quaint and simple folk—honest and respectable American stock—will at once be recognized as the vanguard of the political forces to which planning must look for the exponents of clean government and the shapers of the landscape of a "bigger and better" tomorrow.

Thus it becomes plain enough that one man's liberties can begin only where another man's rights leave off, and this is as true of communities—be they village, borough, city, township, county or state—as it is of individuals. The more swift and complicated life becomes, the more necessary it becomes that people co-operate and stay within certain limits necessary to assure the greatest good to the greatest number. If people abuse the free and unlimited uses of land—whether for offensive residence, dumps, recreational activities—then the greatest good to the greatest number demands restriction in the form of zoning ordinances and police orders. If folk do not like these stern prohibitions they must learn to effect regulation "by persuasion"—by mutual consideration and increased ability to put themselves into the other fellow's place. That is true democracy brought from the skies down to solid everyday earth and living.

ments virtually next door, they can clearly understand that an injury has been suffered and that something should be done to stop such things from happening.

SUGGESTIONS GIVEN FOR THE SECURING OF BLUE RIBBONS

By Miss Edna Stephany

(Home Economics Representative)

With food preservation just started, Pennsylvania women may be interested in the points considered by the judges in awarding ribbons for canned foods.

Quality, general appearance, and package are the basis for judging all canned fruits and vegetables. Under quality, the liquid is considered. This is clear, without sediment or pieces of vegetables or fruits. The hot pack method of canning is used since it gives a better flavored product and reduces spoilage. Canning powders should not be used.

For the best general appearance, fruits and vegetables should be of uniform size and shape and have a natural color suitable to the product. A neat arrangement in the jar improves the general appearance but fancy designs in arrangement take time, increase spoilage, and do not increase the value of canned food.

The last item considered is spoilage and includes the appearance and cleanliness of the jar itself, the lid, and the rubber. Clear, uncolored glass jars are recommended to preserve products for exhibition.

New rubbers are essential to successful canning. Although package does not rate as high as quality and general appearance in awarding ribbons, yet it often is the deciding point when jars of equal general appearance and quality value are being judged. So in thinking of more blue ribbons, remember canned fruits and vegetables should be good quality, have good general appearance, and the package should be satisfactory. If 100 is taken as the perfect score, quality would receive approximately 50, general appearance 40, and package 10.

Canned meat is judged for quality, general appearance and package. Prize winning canned meat has firm yet tender pieces of meat which are not over-cooked or stringy. In general appearance the meat should be cut to fit economically into the container without loss of space, yet the pieces should not be crushed. The arrangement should be uniform and the liquid the characteristic color of the broth of the meat canned.

Jellies are judged on four general points rating as they are mentioned: flavor, appearance, consistency, and package. Ideal jelly has a pronounced fruity flavor, with no sour, scorched, or caramelized taste. In appearance, jelly should have a natural color, be transparent, and have no signs of bubbles, crystals, or mold formation. Jelly of good consistency is tender and quivers to the touch. When slipped from the glass it will hold its shape; consistency is not sticky, gummy, tough, or brittle.

A regular size jelly glass with lid is preferable for exhibit purposes. The glass, lid, and paraffin should be clean and free from stickiness, which usually means the jelly has leaked, thereby indicating a poor seal.

Keep these points in mind so that this year will see more blue ribbon canned foods in Bucks county.

ST. LOUIS—(INS)—Three members of the alto section of the choir of the Brandt Memorial Church have announced their engagement to three members of the bass section of the choir. Those engaged are Lawrence Gross to Miss Roberta Knoblauch; Walter Rabe to Miss Ada Kiel, and Roy Niehoff to Miss Marguerite Weyrauch.

The story deals with a pair of young lovers, played by Olympe and Raymond, who try to live down their dangerous past in a forest hideaway with a great musician whom the world has long forgotten. This man, played by Stone, has so strong an influence on them that they give up their plans to escape the country and devote themselves to preparing for the old man's "comeback."

The screen, which lately has focused a majority of its bigger productions on biographical subjects, has seen many remarkable portraits of characters taken from the past.

Few of these historic personalities, however, enjoyed a life more significant and romantic than the Marco Polo, so few people seem to know, whom Samuel Goldwyn has chosen as the hero of "The Adventures of Marco Polo," his rollicking adventures romance which brings Gary Cooper to the Grand Theatre for two days on Thursday and Friday.

ST. ANN'S NINE CLIMBS STEP CLOSER TO HONORS

(By T. M. June)

Playing superbly behind the wonderful pitching of Mike DeRisi, the St. Ann's A. nine climbed a step closer to the first half crown of the Bristol Twilight League last evening by trimming the Rohm and Haas team, 6-1, on the Grundy ball field.

DeRisi was outstanding in the Saints' triumph. He allowed the chemical workers five hits which he kept far apart. With the stick he slammed a tremendous triple to deep left field in the second to start the Saints' scoring spree. But for the fact that he wished to preserve his strength, Mike would have had a home run. It was DeRisi's fifth straight mound victory without a defeat.

Behind DeRisi, St. Ann's team committed but one error and that aided the Maple Beach team to score its only marker. Ibrag was charged with the faulty play when he let Massilia's single get away from him to score Ritter. Billy Thompson played his usual hang-up game at short-stop and made several sparkling plays.

"MILT" JONES GOES TO PIECES IN 5TH INNING

That old soup-bone of Milt Jones held up for four frames last evening on the Edgely diamond but could not stand the gaff as it went to pieces in the fifth and seventh innings to enable the Superior Zinc aggregation to win over the Odd Fellows, 4-1.

Jones during the first-mentioned stretch did not allow even a semblance of a hit but the works went. Berry opened with a line single to left. Stallone also hit safely. McGinley's best was a pop-up to Purcell. But Johnny Bragg picked out a pitch to his liking and lambasted it to deep left for a triple, scoring both base-runners. Wright grounded out.

That was the beating the veteran of the Bristol Twilight League took in the fifth. He escaped in the sixth when he got rid of Tosti, Roe, and Breslin in order but ran into trouble again in the seventh. Luckily only one run scored. Zeffries, Berry and Stallone singled in succession, on the latter's hit, Zeffries counted. McGinley whiffed and Bragg beat out a punt to load the cushions. Wright forced Berry at the plate and Tosti fled out.

BILLY WINN TO RETURN TO THE LANGHORNE TRACK

Sizzling under the collar because the car he had groomed for a whole year to win the Indianapolis 500 mile race cracked up before he could even qualify, little Billy Winn of Detroit, firecracker of big time automobile racing is coming back to the scene of his early triumphs to win back the prestige he once held in the East.

Winn has filed an entry for the last mile track speed classic to be held this year on Langhorne speedway and he is coming back to win.

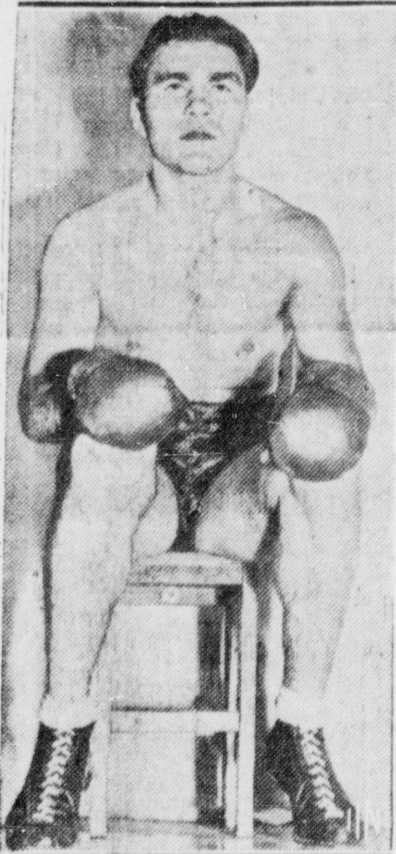

It matters not to Winn that Ralph Hankinson, veteran promoter, has lined up the greatest drivers on the American continent for the classic because the bigger they are the more Winn says it will mean to him if he beats them. Few realize how much it meant to Winn to lose out on the Indianapolis classic, he tells racing officials here, for one of the biggest petroleum companies in the country was backing him with heavy cash and if he had won he would have won an enviable position in the industrial world. His chance isn't entirely lost and he believes that at Langhorne he can win a foothold on a new start.

Winn isn't the most popular driver in the country, Ralph Hankinson says, but more race fans will come out and pay admission to see him run than they will for any other driver and that point is important to the man who spends thousands to provide a speed spectacle. Winn has never been in a race where there wasn't plenty of sensational action.

But in the years when Winn dominated the Eastern auto racing circuits he never encountered as potent a field of drivers as Hankinson has assembled for his 1938 Langhorne classic on June 19. He has scoured the country from coast to coast to get the best and he believes that he has them all. If speed records aren't shattered it will not be because of lack of talent. All of the great drivers of the country will be there, contest board officials say.

Bristol High Wins Lower Bucks Crown

It was a wild and wooley ball game that featured among other things, nine errors, 15 bases on balls, 14 hits, a hit batter, four pitchers and a couple of injured ball players.

On the injured list were Wally Talley, Buckingham second baseman, and his teammate, Al Van Pelt, rightfielder, who collided in chasing Pete DeLuca's short pop fly in short right field. Although considerably shaken up after receiving a bad bump, Talley was able to continue playing following a little rest. However, Van Pelt's injuries forced him from the game. He was removed to the office of a local physician where he was treated, suffering from a broken nose or a badly fractured nose that bled so badly the game was delayed about 10 minutes as coaches worked over him. DeLuca later scored Bristol's first run.

Al Hidy, star centerfielder, was out with an injury. Boyd Eastburn, pitcher and outfielder, became ineligible for playing outside baseball at the end of the season. Horton was very tired, and then Van Pelt was knocked out. Bill Wiggins, who took Van Pelt's place in right, saved Horton in the second inning when he ran far back into right center to grab Bill Gallagher's bid for an extra base blow with two on. The ball was labeled for at least a triple if not a home run. Gallagher, too, pulled several nice drives down in right field to aid the Bristol pitchers.

Carl Leinhausner started on the hill for coach Steve Juenger, but he failed to last out the first inning. Vance Betz relieved him in that frame and he lasted till the sixth when Stanley Dick took over the mound job and he finished up in fine style to receive credit for the victory.

The Stars have one of their usual good teams this year and are playing the best clubs in New Jersey and the Eastern part of Pennsylvania, as well as the best travelling clubs. Whenever Landreth's and Johnson's mix, a good game has always resulted; so, tonight's contest should be no exception and a fast game and a close one is anticipated.

The locals will appear at Atlantic City a few weeks hence in the return game.

The battery tonight for Landreth will be Carey and Broderick. The rest of the line-up will be as usual.
